Offering aid to fish

ALAMEDA COUNTY Public Works biologists Richard Wetzig and Laura Kilgour, above, keep an eye out for steelhead trout trying to climb an embankment along Alameda Creek. Biologists and volunteers did a fish rescue

Tuesday, transporting the fish past the dam so they can swim upstream to spawn. At right, East

Bay Regional Park District biologist Jose Setka makes an incision in an eight-pound steelhead trout netted in Alameda Creek near Niles on Tuesday. He is attempting to implant a radio transmitter for a study of migratory fish.
